KEITH ABBOTT

FOR THE LOVE OF IGNORED THINGS

After how many years
I can tell her walk up the steps

a bad toe a toe so stiff
the joint looks like a golf ball

How many times have I passed it over

on my way to slightly bigger and better things

WHITE

You woke me up with your clean smell

and the rustle
of your bright white smock

The night was hot
I got up and washed

myself and then knelt to kiss

your white
belly
in the moon's light

GNOMIC!

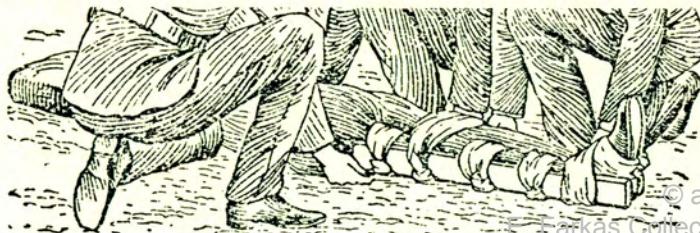

ARTS OVERTIP: (It's the stretchers-for-lechers, oops, we have lift-off, hold-me-tite show.) Maybe we are on our beam-ends, Mrs Mergatreuyd, but some of us are staring up at the sky. "So, how did it happen?" Don't ask me for certain: one moment I'm re-tightening the straps on a haiku - the next - kerfukkit! - like you see. "A touch of the splits in the infinitive, maybe?" Well, not to exclusively put too fine a point upon it, perhaps;

yet, probably, no. O.K. so one says a mouthful: and like it's a mean as mustard-plastered knuckle-sandwich - a bunch of fives fed fast and schticky tricky by Stingin' Momma Okefenokee, the swamplands' golden glovely. See, there's a lot of it about nowadays, so you can't be too careful, what with the smoke-signals and the tattooings and the impletives undeleted, you never know where to look

No (to return to your tender enquiry), I reckon it were a gopher-hole what did it. Into one of them, unwittingly, and your ankle cracks like a crunchy

ALLAN SHUTE

to a girl somewhere trapped in france i know little enough of your culture, but enough of mine to spot the fatal flaw:

you were a marxist, a rosa luxembourg scaled down to an olive-faced kid paid by the state to go to school, and you feared the male element of any where through the fog of another language, neither yours nor mine, we blundered on until finally, we reverted to our own and listened to you listen out of school together in the foothill grass of a mediterranean mountain range, we swam like fogfish in each other's eyes, afraid of touching, yet touching all the same her big black eyes remain as placid or as frightened as pools someone might step in she shifts ground just enough to let us know she's on the move, yet remains fixed enough for us to drain into she shifts again and we see her just down the highway, shimmering and as thin as the sky

JOAN THORNTON

SHARP / PAIN

Upright sitting in his livingroom Amazed death had spoken to him through His collar-bone Driving one sunday Fate played him like a mouth-organ that Landscape shimmering with pain quick hills Doubled-over in agony -sharp Gust slicing through a no-draft severed His breath in half huge tunnels cut Sections of his windpipe -staggering Only a moment loose clouds had already collected themselves when he Glanced up through that glistening windshield Smiling a little breathless like Lazarus fresh up from the grave's mouth

PORTRAIT - JACK KEROUAC

Apologetic eyes gargantuan

Teeth -telegraph your silence teletype

My grief Jack this road swallowed you gaping

That asphalt inferno with its whitened

Spine -pleat in the Mountain Lion's tongue swipe

At mortality Those spaces between Huge pupils & whites of your eyes growing dangerous larger than words swollen Indictments of your sweating palms Human

In bad odor with census-takers O sad Drab little twittering beaurocrats in A citys carefully cultivated

Plane trees palm oaks sequoia what-have-you ?

Lover ? eternally nincompoop Lord

Buddha chanting His Great Wheel gaunt hi-ways grieve

& thru-ways emptied of your Song's reprieve
